Who has not heard about the Oscars, an annual award given to filmmakers by the Academy? The ceremony lasts several hours and is watched by people all over the world, even though for some it is the middle of the night when it is broadcast.

The Oscars were first awarded in 1929, with two hundred and seventy guests in the audience, who had all bought tickets – which cost only $5 at the time! It's only fair, because the ceremony lasted 15 minutes.

The statuette which the winners receive weighs a little less than four kilos, and shows a man with a sword standing on a reel of film. As nobody knows until the last moment who will take the Oscar home, name plates are made for every person nominated, and later recycled if not used.

Why are the awards called "Oscars"? Nobody knows for sure. Some people believe Bette Davis used this name first, because the man reminded her of her husband, others say it was Margaret Herrick who said it looked like her uncle. What we know is the name was made official in 1939.

The Oscars are awarded in many categories and even though the popularity of the show goes up and down, it still remains the biggest dream for any actor, director or editor in the world: to see the little golden man and be able to take him home.
